"Thank you for your very interesting article. Your study seems a bit pointless though. It's just like when Asian countries have the highest growth rates. They don't seem to make much sense. I don't know what the point of studying the average countries is. Would you study China? Russia? What about the smaller countries? The USA has a high gross growth rate, but most of its growth comes from bad debt. Most of the industrial countries have a high growth rate thanks to globalisation and outsourcing. Yes, at the time of writing, North Korea has the highest GDP per capita. It will change though, as they are having war and famine at the moment. There are many countries like South Korea that have very high GDP per capita, and have done well economically in the past. But those countries have a past that is pretty different to the past of South Korea. Yet, even though I know this, I will still include both of these countries in my study. It's just a question of how I say 'average'. You should know how to interpret the data in your study, so I'm not sure why you wouldn't pick the value with the lowest deviation in the world. For example, the average of the world's smallest nation is around 7,000, and the average of the world's largest nation is around 41,000. That shows how close the nation is to the world average. Obviously, the values with the most deviance should be the ones to include, which is what I have done. It's just a question of how to explain it. " "Hi, It's funny that you didn't make any points when I told you about how you were wrong. I don't know how you remember your previous columns, but I try to give as much info as I can in mine. I have been trying to add points to my last few columns, but I am looking for someone who wants to debate, and so far I have had no luck. I will add points when I get the chance." "Thank you, it's clear what you're saying. I'm just not sure if you're saying that we should consider the values of the smaller countries, or the values of the larger countries. " "Here, you should look at the points being made. Consider the values of the smaller countries, as they are closer to the average. If China were to have a bigger GDP, it would be closer to the world average, which makes it closer to the average of

SEAGULL Scientific Bartender 2.3 ОБЪЯВЛЯЮТ From the developers of the .chronic pain conditions, including fibromyalgia, migraine, tension-type headache, or temporomandibular dysfunction, never take a medication for relief of a single attack in a given day. If you do, you can count on having a bad headache for at least a week. Read The Pain Free Life for more information. Q: What are the most popular medications used to treat fibromyalgia? A: The most commonly used medications for fibromyalgia include the antidepressants imipramine and amitriptyline, as well as the nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID) naproxen. Tricyclic antidepressants also are used, but these medications may be less effective and more prone to toxicity problems. Anxiolytics such as prazosin, fluoxetine, and fluvoxamine are more useful than tricyclics in select cases. Pregabalin, a medication used in the treatment of epilepsy, anxiety disorders, and fibromyalgia, is helpful for mild to moderate fibromyalgia (66). Calcium channel blockers (e.g., verapamil) also have been used to reduce the pain and improve sleep, but they are no more effective than placebos. Although most medications used to treat fibromyalgia show at best only modest benefits, gabapentin has been shown to have moderate benefit for some patients (67,68). Q: Can fibromyalgia result from poor blood circulation? A: Fibromyalgia is sometimes referred to as fibrositis, but it is not often associated with a blood clot, which would cause swelling in the joints. Instead, it is believed that fibromyalgia is a condition in which the nervous system is damaged, which in turn damages the muscles and connective tissue. Read The Pain Free Life for more information. Q: What is the correlation between fibromyalgia and depression? A: Fibromyalgia and depression are often treated together, because some studies find an association between depression and the syndrome. Although some experts claim that fibromyalgia is in fact a depressive illness, it is possible that some patients in fibromyalgia clinics are actually treated for depression. It is also possible that the depression in these patients is not the cause of the fibromyalgia, but instead of a result of the problem
